Dylan doesn't shy away from his vocal duties (as he did with Bruce Springsteen's "Dancing in the Dark") and gives a rollicking rendition of the Stones' song without inhibition and with a supreme load of talent. It not only highlights Bob Dylan's love for The Rolling Stones but also marks a high point in Dylan's touring career.

Never Ending Tour, 1993, part 4 | The Supper Club and beyond. On the 16 th and 17 th of November, 1993, Bob Dylan did a two day season at New York's Supper Club, doing two concerts a day, morning and evening, ten songs per concert. The recordings made at these four concerts have become famous in collector circles as much for the well-balanced soundboard recordings as for the enhanced acoustic sound and a setlist that went beyond his usual suspects.
