Poisons of the Past is a study of the possible connection between ergot poisoning and selected events of the past in the United States and Europe. Ergot poisoning, which Mary Matossian suggest as the cause of the bizarre behavior involved in the Salem witch trials, the New England religious revival known as the Great Awakening, the early origins of the French Revolution of 1789, and the outbreak of diptheria in colonial New England, is the result of a fungus that grows on rye. . . .
